

RULE 23 SUBCOMMITTEE REPORT

The Rule 23 Subcommittee has continued to work on the areas it identified before the Advisory Committee's October, 2014, meeting. This work has included conference calls on Dec. 17, 2014, Feb. 6, 2015, and Feb. 12, 2015. Notes on those calls should be included with these agenda materials.

The Subcommittee continues its efforts to become fully informed about pertinent issues regarding Rule 23 practice today. Besides generally keeping an eye out to identify pertinent developments and concerns, Subcommittee members have attended, and expect to attend a considerable number of events about class action practice that together should offer a broad range of views. These events include the following:

ABA 18th Class Action Institute (Chicago, Oct. 23-24, 2014).

Lawyers for Civil Justice Membership Meeting (New York, Dec. 4-5, 2014).

The Impact Fund 13th Annual Class Action Conference (Berkeley, CA, Feb. 26-27, 2015).

George Washington University Roundtable on Settlement Class Actions (Washington, D.C. April 8, 2015).

ALI discussion of Rule 23 issues (Washington, D.C., May 17, 2015).

ABA Litigation Section Meeting (San Francisco, June 19)

American Assoc. for Justice Annual Meeting (Montreal, Canada, July 11-14)

Civil Procedure Professors' Conference (Seattle, WA, July 17)

Duke Law Conference on Class-Action Settlement (Washington, D.C., July 23-24)

Defense Research Institute Conference on Class Actions (Washington, D.C., July 23-24)

Discovery Subcommittee Mini-Conference (DFW Airport, Sept. 11, 2015).

Association of American Law Schools Annual Meeting (New York, Jan. 6-10, 2016) [Participation in this event has not been arranged, but efforts are underway to make such arrangements.]

As should be apparent, the Subcommittee is trying to gather information from many sources as it moves forward. Its present intention is to be in a position to present drafts for possible amendments to the full Committee at its Fall 2015 meeting. If that proves possible, it may be that a preliminary discussion of those amendment ideas can be had with the Standing Committee during its January, 2016, meeting, and a final review of amendment proposals at the Advisory Committee's Spring, 2016, meeting. That schedule would permit submission of proposed preliminary drafts to the Standing Committee at its meeting in May or June of 2016, with a recommended August, 2016, date for publication for public comment. If that occurred, rule changes could go into effect as soon as Dec. 1, 2018. But it is by no means clear that this will prove to be a realistic schedule.

For the present, the key point is that there is no assurance that the Subcommittee will ultimately recommend any amendments. In addition, although it has identified issues that presently seem to warrant serious examination, it has not closed the door on other issues. Instead, it remains open to suggestions about other issues that might justify considering a rule change, as well as suggestions that the issues it has identified are not important or are not likely to be solved by a rule change. Even if the Subcommittee does eventually recommend that the full Committee consider changes to Rule 23, the recommendations may differ from the ideas explored in this memorandum.

The purpose of this memorandum, therefore, is to share with the full Committee the content and fruit of the Subcommittee's recent discussions. The hope is that the discussion at the full Committee meeting will illuminate the various ideas generated so far, and also call attention to additional topics that seem to justify examination by the Subcommittee.

The time has come for moving beyond purely topical discussion, however. In order to make the discussion more concrete, this memorandum presents conceptual sketches of some possible amendments, sometimes accompanied with possible Committee Note language that can provide an idea of what a Note might actually say if rule changes along the lines presented were proposed. These conceptual sketches are not intended as initial drafts of actual rule change proposals, and should not be taken as such. By the time the Subcommittee convenes its mini-conference in September, 2015, it may be in a position to offer preliminary ideas about such drafts. But as the array of questions in this memorandum attests, it has not reached that point yet.

The Subcommittee's work has been greatly assisted by review of the ALI Principles of Aggregate Litigation. Those Principles embody a careful study of some of the issues covered in this memorandum, and occasionally provide a starting point in analysis of those issues, and in drafting possible rule provisions to address them.

The topics covered in this memorandum are:

- (1) Settlement Approval Criteria
  - (2) Settlement Class Certification
  - (3) Cy Pres Treatment
  - (4) Dealing With Objectors
  - (5) Rule 68 Offers and Mootness
  - (6) Issue Classes
  - (7) Notice

- Appendix II: Prevailing Class Action Settlement
Approval Factors Circuit-By-Circuit

(1) Settlement Approval Criteria

In 2003, Rule 23(e) was amended to expand its treatment of judicial review of proposed class-action settlements. To a considerable extent, those amendments built on existing case law on settlement approval. As amended in 1966, Rule 23(e) required court approval for settlement, compromise, or voluntary dismissal of a class action, but it provided essentially no direction about what the court was to do in reviewing a proposed settlement.<sup>1</sup>

Left to implement the rule's requirement of court approval of settlement, the courts developed criteria. To a significant extent, that case law development occurred during the first two decades after Rule 23 was revised in 1966. It produced somewhat similar, but divergent, lists of factors to be employed in different circuits. The Subcommittee has compiled a list of the factors used in the various circuits that is attached as an Appendix to this memorandum.

Several points emerge from the lists of factors. One is that, although they are similar, they are not the same. Thus, lawyers in different circuits, even when dealing with nationwide class actions, would need to attend to the particular list employed in the particular circuit. A second point is that at least some of the factors that some courts adopted in the 1970s seem not to be very pertinent to contemporary class action practice. Yet they command obeisance in the circuits that employ them even though they probably do not facilitate the court's effort to decide whether to approve a proposed settlement. A third point is that there are other matters, not included in the courts' 1970s-era lists, that contemporary experience suggests should matter in assessing settlements.

The ALI Aggregate Litigation Principles proposed a different approach, which is partly reflected in the conceptual discussion draft below. The ALI explanation for its approach was as follows:

The current case law on the criteria for evaluating settlements is in disarray. Courts articulate a wide range of factors to consider, but rarely discuss the significance to be given to each factor, let alone why a particular factor is probative. Factors mentioned in the cases include, among others [there follows a list of about 17 factors].

<sup>1</sup> From 1966 to 2003, Rule 23(e) said, in toto: "A class action shall not be dismissed or compromised without the approval of the court, and notice of the proposed dismissal shall be given to all members of the class in such manner as the court directs."

Many of these criteria may have questionable probative value in various circumstances. For instance, although a court might give weight to the fact that counsel for the class or the defendant favors the settlement, the court should keep in mind that the lawyers who negotiated the settlement will rarely offer anything less than a strong favorable endorsement.

ALI Aggregate Litigation Principles § 3.05 Comment (a) at 205-06.

There are two appendices at the end of the memorandum that offer further details and ideas. Appendix I is the draft Committee Note developed early in the evolution of Rule 23(e) amendments in 2000-02. It offers a list of factors that might be added to a rule revision, or to a Committee Note. The approach of the conceptual draft of the rule amendment idea below, however, trains more on reducing the focus to four specified considerations that seem to be key to approval, adding authority to decline approval based on other considerations even if positive findings can be made on these four topics.

Appendix II offers a review of the current "approval factors" in the various circuits, plus additional information about the California courts' standards for approving settlements and the ALI Principles approach.

As Committee members consider this conceptual draft and the alternative details in Appendix I and Appendix II, one way of approaching the topic is to ask whether adopting a rule like this would provide important benefits. Balanced against that prospect is the likelihood that amending the rule would also produce a period of uncertainty, particularly if it supersedes current prevailing case law in various circuits. At the same time, it may focus attention for courts, counsel, and even objectors, on matters that are more important than other topics included on some courts' lists of settlement-approval factors.

Conceptual Sketch of Committee Note Ideas

1 In 2003, Rule 23(e) was amended to direct that a court may 2 approve a settlement proposal in a class action only on finding 3 that it is "fair, reasonable, and adequate." This provision was 4 based in large measure on judicial experience with settlement
5 review. Since 2003, the courts have gained more experience in 6 settlement review.

8 Before 2003, many circuits had developed lists of "factors"
9 that bore on whether to approve proposed class-action
10 settlements. Although the lists in various circuits were 11 similar, they differed on various specifics and sometimes 12 included factors of uncertain utility in evaluating proposed

13 settlements. The divergence among the lists adopted in various 14 circuits could sometimes cause difficulties for counsel or 15 courts.
16

17 This rule is designed to supersede the lists of factors
18 adopted in various circuits with a uniform set of core factors<sup>2</sup>
19 that the court must find satisfied before approving the proposal.
20 Rule 23(e)(2)(A) makes it clear that the court must affirmatively
21 find all four of the enumerated factors satisfied before it may 22 approve the proposal.
23

24 But this is not a closed list; under Rule 23(e)(2)(B) the 25 court may consider any matter pertinent to evaluating the 26 fairness of the proposed settlement.<sup>3</sup> The rule makes it clear 27 that the court may disapprove the proposal on such a ground even 28 though it can make the four findings required by Rule
29 23(e)(2)(A). Some factors that have sometimes been identified as 30 pertinent seem ordinarily not to be, however. For example, the 31 fact that counsel for the class and the class opponent support
32 the proposal would ordinarily not provide significant support for 33 a court's approval of the proposal. Somewhat similarly,
34 particularly in cases involving relatively small individual
35 relief for class members, the fact the court has received only a
36 small number of objections may not provide significant support
37 for a finding the settlement is fair.<sup>4</sup>
38

39 [Before notice is sent to the class under Rule 23(e)(1), the 40 court should make a preliminary evaluation of the proposal. If 41 it is not persuaded that the proposal provides a substantial
42 basis for possible approval, the court may decline to order
43 notice. But a decision to order notice should not be treated as 44 a "preliminary approval" of the proposal, for the required
45 findings and the decision to approve a proposal must not be made
46 until objections are evaluated and the hearing on the proposal
47 occurs.]<sup>5</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Is this really accurate? The rule permits the court to refer to "any other matter pertinent to approval of the proposal." Should the point be to offer evaluations of factors endorsed in the past by some courts? See Appendix II regarding the factors presently employed in various circuits.

<sup>3</sup> It might be that a much more extensive discussion of other factors could be added here, along the lines of the material in Appendix I.

<sup>5</sup> This paragraph attempts to introduce something endorsed by the ALI Principles -- that preliminary authorization for notice to the class not become "preliminary approval." Whether

48           The first factor calls for a finding that the class
49 representatives and class counsel have provided adequate
50 representation. This factor looks to their entire performance in 51 relation to the action. One issue that may be important in some 52 cases is whether, under the settlement, the class representatives
53 are to receive additional compensation for their efforts.<sup>6</sup>
54 Another may in some instances be the amount of any fee for class
55 counsel contemplated by the proposed settlement.<sup>7</sup> In some 56 instances, the court has already appointed class counsel under 57 Rule 23(g).<sup>8</sup> The court would then need only review the saying so is desirable could be debated. Whether saying so in the Note is sufficient if saying so is desirable could also be debated. One could, for example, consider revising Rule 23(e)(1) along the following lines:

- (1) The court must, after finding that giving notice is warranted by the terms of the proposed settlement, direct notice in a reasonable manner to all class members who would be bound by the proposal.

<sup>6</sup> This factor seems worth mentioning, but perhaps it should not be singled out. It could cut either way. In a small-claim case, it might be sensible to provide reasonable additional compensation for the representative, who otherwise might have had to do considerable work for no additional compensation. The better the "bonus" corresponds to efforts expended by the representation working on the case, the stronger this factor may favor the settlement. The more the amount of compensation reflects some sort of "formula" or set amount unrelated to effort from the representative, the more it may call the fairness of the settlement into question. When the individual recovery is small and the incentive bonus for the class representatives is large, that may, standing alone, raise questions about the settlement, given that the class representatives may have much to lose if the settlement is not approved but little to gain if the case goes to trial and the class recovers many times what the settlement provides.

<sup>7</sup> This factor also seems worth mentioning in the Note. Presumably an agreement that says the court will set the attorney fee, and nothing more, raises fewer concerns than one that says the defendant will not oppose a fee up to $X. But the amount of the fee is often included in the Rule 23(e) notice of proposed settlement so that an additional notice is not mandated by Rule 23(h)(1).

<sup>8</sup> This would include the appointment of "interim counsel" under Rule 23(g)(3), and that fact could be mentioned in the Note if it were considered desirable to do so.

58 performance of counsel since that time. In making this 59 determination about the performance of class counsel in 60 connection with the negotiation of the proposal, the court should 61 be as exacting as Rule 23(g) requires for appointment of class
62 counsel.

63
64 The second factor calls for the court to assess the relief
65 awarded to the class under the proposed settlement in light of a 66 variety of practical matters that bear on whether it is adequate.
67 In connection with this factor, it may often be important for 68 counsel to provide guidance to the court about how these 69 considerations apply to the present action. For example, the 70 prospects for success on the merits, and the likely dimensions of 71 that success, should be evaluated. It may also be important for 72 the court to attend to the degree of development of the case to 73 determine whether the existing record affords a sufficient basis
74 for evaluation of these factors. There is no "minimum" amount of 75 discovery, or other work, that must be done before the parties
76 reach a proposed settlement, but the court may seek assurance
77 that it has a firm foundation for assessing the considerations
78 listed in the second factor.<sup>9</sup>

79
80 The third factor requires the court to find that the 81 proposed method of allocating the benefits of the settlement
82 among members of the proposed class is equitable. A pro rata
83 distribution is not required, but the court may inquire into the 84 proposed method for allocating the benefits of the settlement
85 among members of the class. [It is possible that this inquiry
86 may suggest the need for subclassing.]<sup>10</sup>

87
88 The fourth factor partly reinforces the first factor, and 89 may take account of any agreements identified pursuant to Rule
90 23(e)(3). The court should pay close attention to specifics
91 about the manner and content of negotiation of the proposed 92 settlement. Any "side agreements" that emerged from the 93 negotiations deserve scrutiny. These inquiries may shed light on 94 the second and third factors as well.

95
96 Any other factors that are pertinent to whether to approve
97 the proposed settlement deserve attention in the settlement-

<sup>9</sup> This paragraph attempts to invite appropriate judicial scrutiny of the possible risks of a cheap "early bird" settlement, but also to ward off arguments that no settlement can be approved until considerable "merits" discovery has occurred, or something of the sort.

<sup>10</sup> Is this bracketed language a desirable thing to include in the Note? The point seems obvious in some ways, but the consequences of subclassing may be to delay, or perhaps derail, a settlement.

98 review process. The variety of factors that might bear on a
 99 given proposed settlement is too large for enumeration in a rule, 100 although some that have been mentioned by some courts -- such as 101 support from the counsel who negotiated the settlement -- would 102 ordinarily not be entitled to much weight.
 103

104 This rule provides guidance not only for the court, but also 105 for counsel supporting a proposed settlement and for objectors to 106 a proposed settlement. [The burden of supporting the proposed 107 settlement falls initially on the proponents of the proposal. As 108 noted above, the court's initial decision that notice to the 109 class was warranted under Rule 23(e)(1) does not itself
 110 constitute a "preliminary" approval of the proposal's terms.]<sup>11</sup>
 111

112 [As noted in Rule 23(e)(4) regarding provision of a second
 113 opt-out right, the court may decline to approve a proposed
 114 settlement unless it is modified in certain particulars. But it 115 may not "approve" a settlement significantly different from the 116 one proposed by the parties. Modification of the proposed
 117 settlement may make it necessary to give notice the class again 118 pursuant to Rule 23(e)(1) to permit class members to offer any 119 further objections they may have, or (if the modifications 120 increase significantly the benefits to class members) for class members who opted out to opt back into the class.]<sup>12 13</sup>

<sup>11</sup> This language about the burden of supporting the settlement seems implicit in the rule, and corresponds to language in ALI § 3.05(c).

<sup>12</sup> This paragraph pursues suggestions in ALI § 3.05(e). Are these ideas worthy of inclusion in the Note?

<sup>13</sup> The above sketch of a draft Note says little about the claims process. It may be that more should be said. ALI § 3.05 comment (f) urges that, when feasible, courts avoid the need for submission of claims, and suggests that direct distributions are usually possible when the settling party has reasonably up-to-date and accurate records. This suggestion is not obviously tied to any black letter provision.

The whole problem of claims processing may deserve attention. It is not currently the focus of any rule provisions. It may relate to the cy pres phenomenon discussed in part (3) below. If defendant gets back any residue of the settlement funds, it may have an incentive to make the claims procedure long and difficult. Keeping an eye on that sort of thing is a valid consideration for the court when it passes on the fairness of the settlement. In addition, in terms of valuing the settlement for the class as part of the attorneys' fee decision, the rate of actual claiming may be an important criterion. Cf. 28 U.S.C. § 1712(a) (requiring, in "coupon settlement" cases, that the focus

(2) Settlement Class Certification

The Committee is not writing on a blank slate in addressing this possibility. In 1996, it published a proposal to adopt a new Rule 23(b)(4) explicitly authorizing certification for settlement purposes, under Rule 23(b)(3) only, in cases that might not qualify for certification for litigation purposes. This history may be very familiar to some members of the Committee, but for some it may have receded from view. In order to provide that background, the 1996 rule proposal and accompanying Committee Note are set out. In addition, footnotes call attention to developments since then and contemporary issues that seem relevant to the matter currently before the Committee.

1           (b) Types of Class Actions. A class action may be
2           maintained if Rule 23(a) is satisfied and if:

3                           * * * * *

7           (4) the parties to a settlement request certification
8           under subdivision (b)(3) for purposes of settlement,
9           even though the requirements of subdivision (b)(3)
              might not be met for purposes of trial.

                          * * * * *

The draft Committee Note that accompanied that proposal was as follows (with some footnotes to mention issues presented by doing the same thing as before).

1           Subdivision (b)(4) is new. It permits certification of in setting attorney fees be on "the value to class members of the coupons that are redeemed"). If there is a way to avoid the entire effort of claims submission and review, that might solve a number of problems that have plagued some cases in the past.

At the same time, a "streamlined" claims payment procedure may benefit some class members at the expense of others. A more particularized claims process might differentiate between class members in terms of their actual injuries in ways not readily achievable using only the defendant's records.

Altogether, these issues present challenges. Whether they are suitable topics for a rule provision is another matter. Up until now, they have largely been regarded as matters of judicial management rather than things to be addressed by rule. See Manual for Complex Litigation (4th) § 21.66 (regarding settlement administration).

2 a class under subdivision (b)(3) for settlement purposes,
3 even though the same class might not be certified for trial.
4 Many courts have adopted the practice reflected in this new 5 provision. See, e.g., Weinberger v. Kendrick, 698 F.2d 61,
6 72-73 (2d Cir.1982); In re Beef Industry Antitrust
7 Litigation, 607 F.2d 167, 170-71, 173-78 (5th Cir.1979).
8 Some very recent decisions, however, have stated that a 9 class cannot be certified for settlement purposes unless the 10 same class would be certified for trial purposes. See 11 Georgine v. Amchem Products, Inc., 83 F.3d 610 (3d
12 Cir.1996); In re General Motors Corp. Pick-Up Truck Fuel
13 Tank Litigation, 55 F.3d 768 (3d Cir. 1995). This amendment
14 is designed to resolve this newly apparent disagreement.<sup>14</sup>
15

16 Although subdivision (b)(4) is formally separate, any 17 class certified under its terms is a (b)(3) class with all
18 the incidents of a (b)(3) class, including the subdivision
19 (c)(2) rights to notice and to request exclusion from the 20 class. Subdivision (b)(4) does not speak to the question
21 whether a settlement class may be certified under 22 subdivisions (b)(1) or (b)(2).<sup>15</sup> As with all parts of 23 subdivision (b), all of the prerequisites of subdivision (a)
24 must be satisfied to support certification of a (b)(4)
25 settlement class.<sup>16</sup> In addition, the predominance and 26 superiority requirements of subdivision (b)(3) must be

---

<sup>14</sup> Obviously resolving that 1996 circuit conflict is no longer necessary given the Amchem decision; the issue now is whether to modify what Amchem said or implied.

<sup>15</sup> Deleting the limitation to (b)(3) classes would speak to that question. In speaking to it, one could urge that, at least where there really is "indivisible" relief sought, it does seem that a settlement class should be possible. Perhaps a police practices suit would be an example. Could the SDNY stop-and-frisk class action have been resolved as a settlement class action? It may be that using a class action would be essential to avoid standing issues. See City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95 (1983) (holding that plaintiff injured by police use of choke-hold could sue for damages, but not for an injunction because he could not show it would likely be used on him again). Issues of class definition, and particularly ascertainability, may present challenges in such cases. But it may be that recognizing that settlements are available options in such cases as to future conduct is desirable. It is worth noting that Rule 23 currently has no requirement of notice of any sort to the class in (b)(2) actions unless they are settled.

<sup>16</sup> On this score, the application of (a)(2) in Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes may be of particular importance.

27 satisfied.<sup>17</sup> Subdivision (b)(4) serves only to make it
28 clear that implementation of the factors that control
29 certification of a (b)(3) class is affected by the many 30 differences between settlement and litigation of class
31 claims or defenses. Choice-of-law difficulties, for 32 example, may force certification of many subclasses, or even 33 defeat any class certification, if claims are to be
34 litigated.<sup>18</sup> Settlement can be reached, however, on terms
35 that surmount such difficulties. Many other elements are 36 affected as well. A single court may be able to manage 37 settlement when litigants would require resort to many 38 courts. And, perhaps most important, settlement may prove 39 far superior to litigation in devising comprehensive 40 solutions to large-scale problems that defy ready
41 disposition by traditional adversary litigation.<sup>19</sup>
42 Important benefits may be provided for those who, knowing of 43 the class settlement and the opportunity to opt out, prefer 44 to participate in the class judgment and avoid the costs of 45 individual litigation.

46
47 For all the potential benefits, settlement classes also 48 pose special risks. The court's Rule 23(e) obligations to 49 review and approve a class settlement commonly must surmount
50 the information difficulties that arise when the major 51 adversaries join forces as proponents of their settlement

<sup>17</sup> This sentence was written before Amchem was decided; the Supreme Court fairly clearly said that predominance remained important, but that manageability (a factor in making both the predominance and superiority decision) did not. Whether to continue to require predominance to be established in (b)(4) class actions is open to discussion and raised by an alternative possible rule change explored below in text.

<sup>18</sup> Choice-of-law challenges might be precisely the sort of thing that could preclude settlement certification under a strong view of the predominance requirement. As Sullivan v. DB Investment suggests, differing state law may be accommodated in the settlement context.

<sup>19</sup> Arguably there is a principled tension among the courts of appeal that is pertinent to this point. The Third Circuit has said several times that class-action settlements are desirable to achieve a nationwide solution to a problem. The Seventh Circuit, on the other hand, has on one occasion at least said that "the vision of 'efficiency' underlying this class certification is the model of the central planner. * * * The central planning model -- one case, one court, one set of rules, one settlement price for all involved -- suppresses information that is vital to accurate resolution." In re Bridgestone/Firestone, 288 F.3d 1012, 1020 (7th Cir.2002).

52 agreement.<sup>20</sup> Objectors frequently appear to reduce these 53 difficulties, but it may be difficult for objectors to 54 obtain the information required for a fully informed
55 challenge. The reassurance provided by official
56 adjudication is missing. These difficulties may seem 57 especially troubling if the class would not have been 58 certified for litigation, or was shaped by a settlement
59 agreement worked out even before the action was filed.
60

61 These competing forces are reconciled by recognizing 62 the legitimacy of settlement classes but increasing the 63 protections afforded to class members. Certification of a
64 settlement class under (b)(4) is authorized only on request
65 of parties who have reached a settlement. Certification is 66 not authorized simply to assist parties who are interested
67 in exploring settlement, not even when they represent that 68 they are close to agreement and that clear definition of a
69 class would facilitate final agreement.<sup>21</sup> Certification
70 before settlement might exert untoward pressure to reach 71 agreement, and might increase the risk that the 72 certification could be transformed into certification of a

<sup>20</sup> It should be noted that when this draft Note was written Rule 23(e) was relatively featureless, directing only that court approval was required for dismissal. In 2003, it was augmented with many specifics, and part (1) of this memorandum offers a proposal to refine and focus those specifics.

<sup>21</sup> Note that, as added in 2003, Rule 23(g)(3) authorizes appointment of interim class counsel, a measure that may enable the court to exercise some control over the cast authorized to negotiate a proposed class settlement in the pre-certification phase of the litigation. The Committee Note accompanying this rule addition in 2003 explained:

Settlement may be discussed before certification. Ordinarily, such work is handled by the lawyer who filed the action. In some cases, however, there may be rivalry or uncertainty that makes formal designation of interim counsel appropriate. [The new rule provision] authorizes the court to designate interim counsel to act on behalf of the putative class before the certification decision is made. Failure to make the formal designation does not prevent the attorney who filed the action from proceeding in it. Whether or not formally designated interim counsel, an attorney who acts on behalf of the class before certification must act in the best interests of the class as a whole. For example, an attorney who negotiates a pre-certification settlement must seek a settlement that is fair, reasonable, and adequate for the class.

73 trial class without adequate reconsideration.<sup>22</sup> These 74 protections cannot be circumvented by attempting to certify
75 a settlement class directly under subdivision (b)(3) without 76 regard to the limits imposed by (b)(4).
77

78 Notice and the right to opt out provide the central 79 means of protecting settlement class members under 80 subdivision (b)(3),<sup>23</sup> but the court also must take 81 particular care in applying some of Rule 23's requirements.
82 As to notice, the Federal Judicial Center study suggests
83 that notices of settlement do not always provide the clear
84 and succinct information that must be provided to support
85 meaningful decisions whether to object to the settlement or 86 -- if the class is certified under subdivision (b)(3) --
87 whether to request exclusion.<sup>24</sup> One of the most important
88 contributions a court can make is to ensure that the notice
89 fairly describes the litigation and the terms of the 90 settlement. Definition of the class also must be approached
91 with care, lest the attractions of settlement lead too
92 easily to an over-broad definition. Particular care should 93 be taken to ensure that there are not disabling conflicts of 94 interests among people who are urged to form a single class.
95 If the case presents facts or law that are unsettled and 96 that are likely to be litigated in individual actions, it
97 may be better to postpone any class certification until 98 experience with individual actions yields sufficient
99 information to support a wise settlement and effective review of the settlement.

Conceptual Draft of 23(e) Amendment Idea

The animating objective of the conceptual draft below is to place primary reliance on superiority and the invigorated settlement review (introduced in part (1) of this memorandum) to assure fairness in the settlement context, and therefore to remove emphasis on predominance when settlement certification is

---

<sup>22</sup> This comment seems designed to make the point in ALI § 3.06(d) -- that statements made in support of settlement class certification should not be used against a party that favored such certification but later opposes litigation certification. Perhaps that asks too much of the judge.

<sup>23</sup> Needless to say, this comment is not applicable to (b)(1) or (b)(2) certification, if those were included in (b)(4). It could be noted that 23(e) requires notice (but not opt out) in such cases.

<sup>24</sup> Note that, as amended in 2003, Rule 23(c)(2)(B) responds to the sorts of concerns that were raised by the FJC study.

under consideration.

An underlying question is whether such an approach should be limited to (b)(3) class actions. There may be much reason to include (b)(2) class actions in (b)(4) but perhaps less reason to include (b)(1) cases.

Another question is whether it should be required that in any case seeking certification for purposes of settlement under (b)(4) the parties demonstrate that all requirements of Rule 23(a) are satisfied. Arguably, some of those -- typicality, for example -- don't matter much at the settlement stage. Concern that the past criminal history of the class representative might come into evidence at trial (assuming that makes the representative atypical) may not matter then. On the other hand, introducing a new set of "similar" criteria that are different could produce difficulties. This conceptual draft therefore offers an Alternative 2 that does not invoke Rule 23(a), but the discussion focuses on Alternative 1, which does invoke the existing rule. If the Alternative 2 approach is later preferred, adjustments could be made.

(b) Types of Class Actions. A class action may be maintained if Rule 23(a) is satisfied and if:

* * * * *

Alternative 1

(4) the parties to a settlement [in an action to be certified under subdivision (b)(3),] request certification and the court finds that the action satisfies Rule 23(a), that the proposed settlement is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy, and that it should be approved under Rule 23(e).

Alternative 2

(4) the parties to a settlement [in an action to be certified under subdivision (b)(3),] request certification and the court finds that significant common issues exist, that the class is sufficiently numerous to warrant classwide treatment, and that the class definition is sufficient to ascertain who is and who is not included in the class. The court may then grant class certification if the proposed settlement is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy, and that it should be approved under Rule 23(e).<sup>25</sup>

This approach seems clearly contrary to Amchem, which said that Rule 23(e) review of a settlement was not a substitute for rigorous application of the criteria of 23(a) and (b). It also may appear to invite the sort of "grand compensation scheme" quasi-legislative action by courts that the Court appeared to disavow in Amchem. Particularly if this authority were extended beyond (b)(3),<sup>26</sup> and a right to opt out were not required, this approach seems very aggressive. Below are some thoughts about the sorts of things that might be included in a sketch of a draft Committee Note.

Sketch of Draft Committee Note ideas
[Limited to Alternative 1]

1           Subdivision (b)(4) is new. In 1996, a proposed new 2 subdivision (b)(4) was published for public comment. That new 3 subdivision would have authorized certification of a (b)(3) class
4 for settlement in certain circumstances in which certification
5 for full litigation would not be possible. One stimulus for that 6 amendment proposal was the existence of a conflict among the 7 courts of appeals about whether settlement certification could be 8 used only in cases that could be certified for full litigation.
9 That circuit conflict was resolved by the holding in Amchem
10 Products, Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591 (1997), that the fact of 11 settlement is relevant to class certification. The (b)(4)

<sup>25</sup> ALI § 3.06(b) says that "a court may approve a settlement class if it finds that the settlement satisfies the criteria of [Rule 23(e)], and it further finds that (1) significant common issues exist; (2) the class is sufficiently numerous to warrant classwide treatment, and (3) the class definition is sufficient to ascertain who is and who is not included in the class. The court need not conclude that common issues predominate over individual issues."

<sup>26</sup> On this score, note that ALI § 3.06(c) said:

In addition to satisfying the requirements of subsection (b) of this Section [quoted in a footnote above], in cases seeking settlement certification of a mandatory class, the proponents of the settlement must also establish that the claims subject to settlement involve indivisible remedies, as defined in the Comment to § 2.04.

Needless to say, "indivisible remedies" is not a term used in the civil rules. Attempting to define them, or some alternative term, might be challenging. § 2.04 has three subsections, and is accompanied by six pages of comments and six pages of Reporters' Notes.

12 amendment proposal was not pursued after that decision.
13

14 Rule 23(f), also in the package of amendment proposals
15 published for comment in 1996, was adopted and went into effect
16 in 1998. As a consequence of that addition to the rule, a
17 considerable body of appellate precedent on class-certification
18 principles has developed. In 2003, Rule 23(e) was amended to 19 clarify and fortify the standards for review of class
20 settlements, and subdivisions (g) and (h) were added to the rule
21 to govern the appointment of class counsel, including interim
22 class counsel, and attorney fees for class counsel. These 23 developments have provided added focus for the court's handling
24 of the settlement-approval process under Rule 23(e).
25

26 Concerns have emerged about whether it might sometimes be 27 too difficult to obtain certification solely for purposes of 28 settlement. Some reported that alternatives such as 29 multidistrict processing or proceeding in state courts have grown
30 in popularity to achieve resolution of multiple claims.
31

32 This amendment is designed to respond to those concerns by 33 clarifying and, in some instances, easing the path to 34 certification for purposes of settlement. Like the 1996
35 proposal, this subdivision is available only after the parties
36 have reached a proposed settlement and presented it to the court.
37 Before that time, the court may, under Rule 23(g)(3), appoint
38 interim counsel to represent the interests of the putative class.
39

40 [Subdivision (b)(4) is not limited to Rule 23(b)(3) class
41 actions. It is likely that actions brought under subdivision
42 (b)(3) will be the ones in which it is employed most frequently, 43 but foreclosing pre-certification settlement in actions brought 44 under subdivisions (b)(1) or (b)(2) seems unwarranted. At the 45 same time, it must be recognized that approving a class-action
46 settlement is a challenging task for a court in any class action.
47 Amendments to Rule 23(e) clarify the task of the judge and the 48 role of the parties in connection with review of a proposed
49 settlement.<sup>27</sup>]
50

51 Like all class actions, an action certified under 52 subdivision (b)(4) must satisfy the requirements of Rule 23(a).<sup>28</sup>

<sup>27</sup> This treatment may be far too spare. Note that the ALI proposal limited the use of "mandatory class action" settlement to cases involving "indivisible relief," a term that is not presently included in the civil rules and that the ALI spent considerable effort defining.

<sup>28</sup> This is a point at which Alternative 2, modeled on the ALI approach, would produce different Committee Note language. Arguments could be made that Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes has

53 Unless these basic requirements can be satisfied, a class
54 settlement should not be authorized.
55

56 Increasing confidence in the ability of courts to evaluate 57 proposed settlements, and tools available to them for doing so,
58 provide important support for the addition of subdivision (b)(4).
59 For that reason, the subdivision makes the court's conclusion
60 under Rule 23(e) an essential component to settlement class
61 certification. Under amended Rule 23(e), the court can make the 62 required findings to approve a settlement only after completion
63 of the full Rule 23(e) settlement-review process. Given the 64 added confidence in settlement review afforded by strengthening 65 Rule 23(e), the Committee is comfortable with reduced emphasis on 66 some provisions of Rule 23(a) and (b).<sup>29</sup>
67

68 Subdivision (b)(4) also borrows a factor from subdivision
69 (b)(3) as a prerequisite for settlement certification -- that the 70 court must also find that resolution through a class-action
71 settlement is superior to other available methods for fairly and 72 efficiently adjudicating the controversy. Unless that finding 73 can be made, there seems no reason for the court or the parties
74 to undertake the responsibilities involved in a class action.
75

76 Subdivision (b)(4) does not require, however, that common
77 questions predominate in the action. To a significant extent, 78 the predominance requirement, like manageability, focuses on 79 difficulties that would hamper the court's ability to hold a fair
80 trial of the action. But certification under subdivision (b)(4)
81 assumes that there will be no trial. Subdivision (b)(4) is 82 available only in cases that satisfy the common-question
83 requirements of Rule 23(a)(2), which ensure commonality needed
84 for classwide fairness. Since the Supreme Court's decision in 85 Amchem, the courts have struggled to determine how predominance
86 should be approached as a factor in the settlement context. This 87 amendment recognizes that it does not have a productive role to 88 play and removes it.<sup>30</sup>

raised the bar under Rule 23(a)(2) too high. The ALI approach is to say that "significant common issues" are presented. See ALI § 3.06(b).

<sup>29</sup> Without exactly saying so, this sentence is meant to counter the assertion in Amchem that Rule 23(e) is an additional factor, not a superseding consideration, when settlement certification is proposed.

<sup>30</sup> This material attempts to address Amchem's assertion that superiority continues to be important. Is it persuasive? If so, should the Note say that it is changing what the Supreme Court said in Amchem, perhaps by citing the passage in the decision where the court discussed superiority?

89 Settlement certification also requires that the court
90 conclude that the class representatives are typical and adequate 91 under Rule 23(a)(3) and (4).<sup>31</sup> Under amended Rule 23(e), the 92 court must also find that the settlement proposal was negotiated
93 at arms length by persons who adequately represented the class
94 interests, and that it provides fair and adequate relief to class
95 members, treating them equitably.

96
97 In sum, together with changes to Rule 23(e), subdivision
98 (b)(4) ensures that the court will give appropriate attention to 99 adequacy of representation and the fair treatment of class
100 members relative to each other and the potential value of their 101 claims. At the same time, it avoids the risk that a desirable
102 settlement will prove impossible due to factors that matter only 103 to a hypothetical trial scenario that the settlement is designed 104 to avoid.

105
106 [Should the court conclude that certification under 107 subdivision (b)(4) is not warranted -- because the proposed 108 settlement cannot be approved under subdivision (e) or because 109 the requirements of Rule 23(a) or superiority are not met -- the 110 court should not rely on the parties' statements in connection
111 with proposed (b)(4) certification in relation to later class certification or merits litigation.]<sup>32</sup>

<sup>32</sup> The ALI Principles include such a provision in the rule. This suggests a comment the Note. The ALI provision seems to have been prompted by one 2004 Seventh Circuit decision, Carnegie v. Household Int'l, Inc., 376 F.3d 656, 660 (7th Cir. 2004). Carnegie was a rather remarkable case. It first came to the Seventh Circuit in Reynolds v. Beneficial National Bank, 288 F.3d 277 (7th Cir. 2002), after the district judge granted settlement class certification and, on the strength of that, enjoined litigation in various state courts against the same defendants on behalf of statewide classes. The Court of Appeals reversed approval of the proposed settlement in the federal court, "concerned that the settlement might have been the product of collusion between the defendants, eager to minimize their liability, and the class lawyers, eager to maximize their fees." 376 F.3d at 659.

The Court of Appeals (under its Local Rule 36), then directed that the case be assigned on remand to a different judge, and the new judge approved the substitution of a new class representative (seemingly an objector the first time around) and appointed new class counsel. This new judge later certified a litigation class very similar to the settlement class originally certified. Defendants appealed that class-certification

(3) Cy pres

The development of cy pres provisions in settlements has not depended meaningfully on any precise provisions of Rule 23. The situations in which this sort of arrangement might be desired probably differ from one another. Several come to mind:

- (1) Specific individual claimants cannot be identified but

decision, objecting that the new judge had improperly directed the defendants initially to state their objections to litigation certification, thereby imposing on them the burden of proving that certification was not justified instead of making plaintiff justify certification. The Seventh Circuit rejected this argument because the new judge "was explicit that the burden of persuasion on the validity of the objections [to certification] would remain on the plaintiffs." 376 F.3d at 662.

The Court of Appeals also invoked the doctrine of judicial estoppel, which it explained involved an "antifraud policy" that precluded defendants "from challenging [the class's] adequacy, at least as a settlement class," noting that "the defendants benefitted from the temporary approval of the settlement, which they used to enjoin the other * * * litigation against them." Id. at 660. At the same time, the court acknowledged "that a class might be suitable for settlement but not for litigation." It added comments about the concern that its ruling might chill class-action settlement negotiations (id. at 663):

The defendants tell us that anything that makes it easier for a settlement class to molt into a litigation class will discourage the settlement of class actions. * * *
* But the defendants in this case were perfectly free to defend against certification; they just didn't put up a persuasive defense.

Whether this decision poses a significant problem is debatable. The situation seems distinctive, if not unique. The value of a rule provision concerning the "binding" effect of defendants' support for certification for settlement, or even a comment in the Note is therefore also debatable. In any event, it might not prevent a state court from doing what it says should not be done. Recall that in the original Reynolds appeal (described above), there was an injunction against state-court litigation. Whether a federal rule can prevent a state court from giving weight to these sorts of matters is an interesting issue. As a general matter, this subject reminds us of other provisions about the preclusive effect of class-certification rulings or to decisions disapproving a proposed class settlement. That has been an intriguing prospect in the past, but one the Advisory Committee has not followed.

measures to "compensate" them can be devised. The famous California case of Daar v. Yellow Cab, 433 P.2d 732 (Cal. 1967), is the prototype of this sort of thing -- because the Yellow Cab meters had been set too high in L.A. for a period of time, the class action resolution required that the Yellow Cab meters be set a similar amount too low for a similar period, thereby conferring a relatively offsetting benefit on more or less the same group of people, people who used Yellow Cabs in L.A. (Note that competing cab companies in this pre-Uber era may not have liked the possibility that customers would favor Yellow Cab cabs because they would be cheaper.)

(2) Individual claimants could be identified, but the cost of identifying them and delivering money to them would exceed the amount of money to be delivered.

(3) A residue is left after the claims process is completed, and the settlement does not provide that the residue must be returned to the defendant. (If it does provide for return to the defendant, there may be an incentive for the defendant to introduce extremely rigorous criteria class members have to satisfy to make claims successfully.)

Whether all these kinds of situations (and others that come to mind) should be treated the same is not certain. In some places state law may actually address such things. See Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 384, which contains specific directions to California judges about residual funds left after payments to class members.

Much concern has been expressed in several quarters about questionable use of cy pres provisions, and the courts' role in approving those arrangements under Rule 23. Most notable is the Chief Justice's statement regarding denial of certiorari in Marek v. Lane, 134 S.Ct. 8 (2013) that the Court "may need to clarify the limits on the use of such remedies." Id. at 9. That case involved challenges to provisions in a settlement of a class action against Facebook alleging privacy claims.

§3.07 of the ALI Principles directly addresses cy pres in a manner that several courts of appeals have found useful. One might argue that the courts' adoption of §3.07 makes a rule change unnecessary. On the other hand, the piecemeal adoption by courts of the ALI provision seems a dubious substitute, and it may be wise to have in mind the Chief Justice's suggestion that the Supreme Court may need to take a case to announce rules for the subject.

The ALI provision could be a model for additions to Rule 23(e):

1 (e) Settlement, Voluntary Dismissal, or Compromise. The claims,
 2 issues, or defenses of a certified class may be settled,
 3 voluntarily dismissed, or compromised only with the court's
 4 approval. The following procedures apply to a proposed
 5 settlement, voluntary dismissal, or compromise:

7 * * * * *

8
 9 (3) The court may approve a proposal that includes a cy
 10 pres remedy [if authorized by law]<sup>33</sup> even if such a 11 remedy could not be ordered in a contested case. The 12 court must apply the following criteria in determining 13 whether a cy pres award is appropriate:
 14

15 (A) If individual class members can be identified
 16 through reasonable effort, and the distributions
 17 are sufficiently large to make individual
 18 distributions economically viable, settlement

<sup>33</sup> This bracketed qualification is designed to back away from creating new authority to use cy pres measures. It is clear that some courts have been authorizing cy pres treatment. Indeed, the Eighth Circuit's recent opinion in In re BankAmerica Corp. Securities Lit., 775 F.3d 1060 (8th Cir. 2015), suggested that it is impatient with their willingness to do so. It is less clear where the authority for them to do so comes from. In some places, like California, there is statutory authority, but there are probably few statutes. It may be a form of inherent power, though that is a touchy subject. Adding a phrase of this sort is designed to make clear that the authority does not come from this rule.

On the other hand, one might say that the inclusion of cy pres provisions in the settlement agreement is entirely a matter of party agreement and not an exercise of judicial power. But one might respond that the binding effect of a settlement class action judgment is dependent on the exercise of judicial power, and that the court has a considerable responsibility to ensure the appropriateness of that arrangement before backing it up with judicial power. So the rule would guide the court in its exercise of that judicial power.

In any event, it may be that there is not need to say "if authorized by law" in the rule because -- like many other agreements included in settlements -- cy pres provisions do not depend on such legal authorization, even if their binding effect does depend on the court's entry of a judgment.

19 proceeds must<sup>34</sup> be distributed directly to 20 individual class members;

21
22 (B) If the proposal involves individual distributions
23 to class members and funds remain after 24 distributions, the settlement must provide for 25 further distributions to participating class
26 members unless the amounts involved are too small
27 to make individual distributions economically
28 viable or other specific reasons exist that would 29 make such further distributions impossible or 30 unfair;

31
32 (C) The proposal may provide that, if the court finds 33 that individual distributions are not viable under 34 Rule 23(e)(3)(A) or (B), a cy pres approach may be 35 employed if it directs payment to a recipient
36 whose interests reasonably approximate those being 37 pursued by the class. [The court may presume that 38 individual distributions are not viable for sums
39 of less than $100.]<sup>35</sup> [If no such recipient can 40 be identified, the court may approve payment to a
41 recipient whose interests do not reasonably
42 approximate the interests being pursued by the 43 class if such payment would serve the public
44 interest.]<sup>36</sup>

<sup>35</sup> There have been reports that in a significant number of cases distributions of amounts less than $100 can be accomplished. This provision is borrowed from a proposed statutory class-action model prepared by the Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. It may be that technological improvements made such an exclusion from the mandatory distribution requirements of (e)(3)(A) and (B) unnecessary.

<sup>36</sup> This bracketed material is drawn from the ALI proposal. It might be questioned on the ground that it goes beyond what the Enabling Act allows a rule to do. But this provision is about approving what the parties have agreed, not inventing a new "remedy" to be used in litigated actions. It may be that in some litigated actions there is a substantive law basis for a court-imposed distribution measure of the sort the bracketed language describes. Claims for disgorgement, for example, might support such a measure. Though the substantive law upon which a claim is based might, therefore, support such a measure, this provision does not seek to authorize such a remedy.

(43) The parties seeking approval * * *

As noted above, the ALI proposal has received considerable support from courts. A recent example is In re BankAmerica Securities Litigation, 775 F.3d 1060 (8th Cir. 2015), in which the majority vigorously embraced ALI § 3.07, in part due to "the substantial history of district courts ignoring and resisting circuit court cy pres concerns and rulings in class action cases." It also resisted the conclusion that the fact those class members who had submitted claims had received everything they were entitled to receive under the settlement is the same as saying they were fully compensated, which might respond to arguments against proposed (3)(B) above that further distributions to class members who made claims should not occur if they already received the maximum they could receive pursuant to the settlement.

The possibility of Enabling Act issues should be noted, but the solution may be that this is an agreement subject to court approval under Rule 23(e), not a new "remedy" provided by the rules for litigated actions. The situation in California may be illustrative.

Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 384 directs a California state court to direct left-over funds to groups furthering the proposes sought in the class action or to certain public interest purposes. In a federal court in California, one might confront arguments that §384 dictates how such things must be handled. Reports indicate that the federal courts in California do not regard the statute as directly applicable to cases in federal court, but that they do find it instructive as they apply Rule 23.

An argument in favor of Enabling Act authority could invoke the Supreme Court's Shady Grove decision and say that Rule 23 occupies this territory and the state law provision on cy pres treatment cannot be applied in federal court as a result. If that argument is right, it seems to provide some support for a rule that more explicitly deals with the sort of thing addressed

Note that the Class Action Fairness Act itself has a small provision that authorizes something along this line. Thus, 28 U.S.C. § 1712(e) provides: "The court, in its discretion, may also require that a proposed settlement agreement provide for the distribution of a portion of the value of unclaimed coupons to 1 or more charitable or governmental organizations, as agreed to by the parties." This section of the statute deals with coupon settlements more generally, and not in a manner that encourages parties to use them. It is not certain whether resort to the cy pres aspect of CAFA has been attempted with any frequency.

above. But the bracketed sentence at the end of (C) might raise Enabling Act concerns. The bracketed "if authorized by law" suggestion in the draft rule above is a first cut at a way to sidestep these issues.

It may be said that the bracketed language is not necessary because this provision is only about settlement agreements. Settlement agreements can include provisions that the court could not order as a remedy in a litigated case. So there is latitude to give serious attention to adding references to cy pres treatment in the settlement-approval rule. But it can also be emphasized that the real bite behind the agreement comes from the court's judgment, not the agreement itself.

If the rule can provide such authority, should it so provide? Already quite a few federal judges have approved cy pres arrangements. Already some federal courts have approved the principles in the ALI's § 3.07, from which the first sketch above is drawn.

Despite all those unresolved issues, it may nonetheless be useful to reflect on what sorts of things a Committee Note might say:

Sketch of Draft Committee Note ideas

1           When a class action settlement for a payment of a specified
2 amount is approved by the court under Rule 23(e), there is often
3 a claims process by which class members seek their shares of the 4 fund. In reviewing a proposed settlement, the court should focus
5 on whether the claims process might be too demanding, deterring
6 or leading to denial of valid claims.<sup>37</sup> Ideally, the entire fund
7 provided will be used (minus reasonable administrative costs) to 8 compensate class members in accord with the provisions of the 9 settlement.

10
11           On occasion, however, funds are left over after all initial 12 claims have been paid. Courts faced with such circumstances have 13 resorted on occasion to a practice invoking principles of cy pres
14 to support distribution of at least some portion of the 15 settlement proceeds to persons or entities not included in the 16 class. In some instances, these measures have raised legitimate

<sup>37</sup> It might be attractive to be more forceful (and probably negative) somewhere about reversionary provisions. For example, the Note might say that if there is a reverter clause the court should look at the claims process very carefully to make sure that it does not impose high barriers to claiming. Probably that belongs in the general Rule 23(e) Committee Note about approving settlement proposals. It seems somewhat out of place here, even though it logically relates to the topic at hand.

17 concerns.

19 Subdivision (e)(3) recognizes and regularizes this activity.
20 The starting point is that the settlement funds belong to the 21 class members and do not serve as a resource for general "public
22 interest" activities overseen or endorsed by the court.<sup>38</sup>
23 Nonetheless, the possibility that there will be a residue after 24 the settlement distribution program is completed makes provision 25 for this possibility appropriate. Unless there is no prospect of 26 a residue after initial payment of claims, the issue should be
27 included in the initial settlement and evaluated by the court
28 along with the other provisions of that proposal.<sup>39</sup> [If no such 29 provision is included in the initial proposal but a residue
30 exists after initial distribution to the class, the court may 31 address the question at that point, but then should consider 32 whether a further notice to the class should be ordered regarding 33 the proposed disposition of the residue.<sup>40</sup>]

34

35 Subdivision (e)(3) does not create a new "remedy" for class
36 actions. Such a remedy may be available for some sorts of 37 claims, such as disgorgement of ill-gotten funds, but this rule
38 does not authorize such a remedy for a litigated class action.
39 The cy pres provision is something the parties have included in 40 their proposal to the court, and the court is therefore called 41 upon to decide whether to approve what the parties have agreed
42 upon to resolve the case.

43

44 Subdivision (e)(3) provides rules that must be applied in 45 deciding whether to approve cy pres provisions. Paragraph (A) 46 requires that settlement funds be distributed to class members if 47 they can be identified through reasonable effort when the

<sup>38</sup> Is this too strongly worded, or too much a bit of "political" justification?

<sup>39</sup> Is this too strong? It seems that addressing these issues up front is desirable, and giving notice to the class about the provision for a residue is also valuable. That ties in with the idea that this is about the court's general settlement review authority, and it may prompt attention to whether the claims process is too demanding.

<sup>40</sup> Note that the Eighth Circuit raised the question whether, in the latter situation, there would be a need to notice the class a second time about this change in circumstances and the cy pres treatment under consideration. It seems that the better thing is to get the matter on the table at the outset, although that might make it seem that the parties expect the claims process to have faults. Probably devising a "perfect" claims process is very difficult, so a residue is not proof that the claims process was seriously flawed.

48 distributions are large enough to be to make distribution
49 economically viable. It is not up to the court to determine
50 whether the class members are "deserving," or other recipients
51 might be more deserving.<sup>41</sup> Thus, paragraph (A) makes it clear 52 that cy pres distributions are a last resort, not a first resort.
53

54 Paragraph (B) follows up on the point in paragraph (A), and 55 provides that even after the first distribution is completed
56 there must be a further distribution to class members of any 57 residue if a further distribution is economically viable. This 58 provision applies even though class members have been paid "in 59 full" in accordance with the settlement agreement. Settlement
60 agreements are compromises, and a court may properly approve one
61 that does not provide the entire relief sought by the class
62 members through the action. Unless it is clear that class
63 members have no plausible legal right to receive additional 64 money, they should receive additional distributions.<sup>42</sup>
65

66 Paragraph (C), therefore, deals only with the rare case in 67 which individual distributions are not viable. The court should 68 not assume that the cost of distribution is prohibitive unless 69 presented with evidence firmly supporting that conclusion.<sup>43</sup> It 70 should take account of the possibility that electronic means may 71 make identifying class members and distributing proceeds to them
72 inexpensive in some cases.<sup>44</sup> [The rule does provide that the 73 court may so assume for distributions of less than $100.<sup>45</sup>] When 74 the court finds that individual distributions would be

<sup>41</sup> This responds to an argument made in the Eight Circuit case -- that the funds distributed would be to institutional investors, who were less deserving than the legal services agencies that would benefit from the cy pres distributions.

<sup>42</sup> This is an effort to deal with the "paid in full" or "overcompensation" point.

<sup>43</sup> If we are to authorize the "only cy pres" method, what can we say about the predicate for using it? The Note language addresses cost. How about cases in which there simply is no way to identify class members? Should those fall outside this provision?

<sup>45</sup> Should we include such a provision? As noted above, smaller distributions are reportedly done now. Suppose a bank fee case in which the bank improperly charged thousands of account holders amounts less than $100. Assuming the bank could easily identify those account holders and the amount of improperly charged fees, why not direct that their accounts be credited?

75 economically infeasible, it may approve an alternative use of the 76 settlement funds if the substitute recipient's interests
77 "reasonably approximate those being pursued by the class." In 78 general, that determination should be made with reference to the 79 nature of the claim being asserted in the case. [Only if no such 80 recipient can be identified may the court authorize distribution 81 to another recipient, and then only if such distribution would serve the public interest.<sup>46</sup>]

---

<sup>46</sup> This is in brackets in the rule and the Note because, even if the parties agree and the class receives notice of the agreement, it seems a striking use of judicial power. Perhaps, as indicated above in the Note, it is mainly the result of the parties' agreement, not the court's power, which is limited to reviewing and deciding whether to approve the parties' agreement.

(4) Objectors

The behavior of some objectors has aroused considerable ire among class-action practitioners. But it is clear that objectors play a key role in the settlement-approval process. Rule 23(e)(5) says that class members may object to the proposed settlement, and Rule 23(h)(2) says they may object to the proposed attorney fee award to class counsel. Judges may come to rely on them. CAFA requires that state attorneys general (or those occupying a comparable state office) receive notice of proposed settlements, and they may be a source of useful information to the judge called upon to approve or disapprove a proposed settlement.

The current rules place some limits on objections. Rule 23(e)(5) also says that objections may be withdrawn only with the court's permission. That requirement of obtaining the court's permission was added in 2003 in hopes that it would constrain "hold ups" that some objectors allegedly used to extract tribute from the settling parties.

Proposals have been made to the Appellate Rules Committee to adopt something like the approval requirement under rule 23(e)(5) for withdrawing an appeal from district-court approval of a settlement. Since the delay occasioned by an appeal is usually longer than the period needed to review a proposed settlement at the district-court level, that sort of rule change might produce salutary results. But it might be that the district judge would be better positioned to decide whether to permit withdrawal of the appeal than the court of appeals. The Rule 23 Subcommittee intends to remain in touch with the Appellate Rules Committee on these issues as it proceeds with its attention to the civil rules.

Another set of ideas relates to requiring objectors to post a bond to appeal. In Tennille v. Western Union Co., 774 F.3d 1249 (10th Cir. 2014), the district court, relying on Fed. R. App. P. 7, entered an order requiring objectors who appealed approval of a class-action settlement to post a bond of over $1 million to cover (1) the anticipated cost of giving notice to the class a second time, (2) the cost of maintaining the settlement pending resolution of the appeals, and (3) the cost of printing and copying the supplemental record in the case (estimated at $25,000). The court of appeals ruled that the only costs for which a bond could be required under Appellate Rule 7 were those that could be imposed under a statute or rule, so the first two categories were entirely out, and the third category was possible, but that the maximum amount the appellate court could uphold would be $5,000. Other courts have occasionally imposed bond requirements. But the Subcommittee is not presently suggesting any civil rule changes on this subject.

Regarding the civil rules, it is not certain whether the adoption of the approval requirement in Rule 23(e)(5) in 2003 had a good effect in district court proceedings, although some reports indicate that it has. Two sets of ideas are under consideration. One slightly amplifies the Rule 23(e)(5) process by borrowing an idea from Rule 23(3)(2) -- that the party seeking to withdraw an objection advise the court of any "side agreements" that influenced the decision to withdraw. The other follows a suggestion in the ALI Aggregate Litigation principles for imposition of sanctions on those who make objections for improper purposes.

Adding a reporting obligation to (e)(5)

1 (e) Settlement, Voluntary Dismissal, or Compromise. The claims,
2 issues, or defenses of a certified class may be settled,
3 voluntarily dismissed, or compromised only with the court's
4 approval. The following procedures apply to a proposed
5 settlement, voluntary dismissal, or compromise:

6 * * * * *

9 Alternative 1

10
11 (5) Any class member may object to the proposal if it
12 requires court approval under this subdivision (e); the 13 objection may be withdrawn only with the court's
14 approval, and the parties must file a statement
15 identifying any agreement made in connection with the 16 withdrawal.

17

19
20 (5) Any class member may object to the proposal if it
21 requires court approval under this subdivision (e); the
22 objection may be withdrawn only after the filing of a
23 statement identifying any agreement made in connection
24 with the withdrawal, and court approval of the request to withdraw the objection with the court's approval.

If it is true that the current provision requiring court approval for withdrawing an objection does the needed job, there may be no reason to add this reporting obligation. There is at least some reason to suspect that class counsel may take the position that there is already some sort of implicit reporting obligation. Experience with the efficacy of the existing reporting provision in (e)(3) may also shed light whether adding one to (e)(5) would be desirable.

Objector sanctions

§ 3.08(d) of the ALI Principles says:

If the court concludes that objectors have lodged objections that are insubstantial and not reasonably advanced for the purpose of rejecting or improving the settlement, the court should consider imposing sanctions against objectors or their counsel under applicable law.

Comment c to this section says that it "envisions that sanctions will be invoked based upon existing law (e.g., Fed. R. Civ. P. 11, 28 U.S.C. § 1927)."

This proposal raises a number of questions. One idea might be to say explicitly that any objection is subject to Rule 11. That may seem a little heavy handed with lay objectors, and a statement in the class settlement notice appearing to threaten sanctions might do more harm than good. Another idea might be to indicate in a rule that § 1927 is a source of authority to impose sanctions. But that would be a peculiar rule, since it would not provide any authority but only remind the court of its statutory authority. The ALI proposal's "should consider" formulation seems along that line. It does not say the court should do it, but only that the court should think about imposing sanctions.

It seems that a provision along these lines could serve a valuable purpose. In the 2000-02 period, when the 2003 amendments were under consideration, there was much anguish about how to distinguish "good" from "bad" objectors. There is no doubt whatsoever that there are good ones, whose points assist the court and improve the settlement in many instances. But it seems very widely agreed that there are also some bad objectors who seek to profit by delaying final consummation of the deal.

Defining who is a "good" or a "bad" objector in a rule is an impossible task. But there is reason to think that judges can tell in the specific context of a given case and objection. So the goal here would be to rely on the judge's assessment of the behavior of the objector rather than attempt in a rule to specify. Discussion on this topic has only begun in the Subcommittee, but for purposes of broader airing of the issues the following conceptual draft ideas might be informative:

Alternative 1

- 1           (5) Any class member may, subject to Rule 11, object to the 2           proposal if it requires court approval under this
3           subdivision (3); the objection may be withdrawn only
4           with the court's approval.

8           (5) Any class member may object to the proposal if it
9           requires court approval under this subdivision (e); the
10           objection may be withdrawn only with the court's
11           approval. If the court finds that an objector has made 12           objections that are insubstantial [and] {or} not 13           reasonably advanced for the purpose of rejecting or 14           improving the settlement, the court [should] {may} 15           impose sanctions on objectors or their counsel {under applicable law}.

Simply invoking Rule 11 (Alternative 1) may be simplest. But as noted above, it may also deter potential objectors too forcefully. One might debate whether the certifications of Rule 11(b) are properly applied here. Invoking Rule 11(c) in this rule might be simpler than trying to design parallel features here. On the other hand, (e)(5) says that the objector may withdraw the objection only with the court's approval while Rule 11's safe harbor provision seems not to require any court approval but instead to permit (perhaps to prompt) a unilateral withdrawal. Rule 11(c) also requires that the party who seeks Rule 11 sanctions first prepare and serve (but not file) a motion for sanctions, which might be a somewhat wasteful requirement.

Alternative 2 is more along the lines of the ALI proposal. But perhaps a provision like this one should create authority for imposing sanctions. The ALI approach seems to rely on authority from somewhere else. If the rule does not create such authority, it sounds more like an exhortation than a rule. The choice between possible verbs -- "should" or "may" -- seems to bear somewhat on this issue. To say "may" is really saying only that courts are permitted to do what the rules already say they may do; it's like a reminder. To say "should" is an exhortation. Does it supplant the "may" that appears in Rule 11? Perhaps judges are to be quicker on the draw with objectors than original parties. One could also consider saying "must," but since that was rejected for Rule 11 it would seem odd here. In any event, if the rule creates authority to impose sanctions, perhaps it should say what sanctions are authorized.

The description in Alternative 2 of the finding that the court must make to proceed to sanctions on the objector deserves attention. There is a choice between "and" and "or" regarding whether objections that are "insubstantial" were also not advanced for a legitimate purpose. Probably a judge would not distinguish between these things; if the objection is substantial, maybe it is nonetheless advanced for improper reasons. But would a judge ever think so? Does the fact of proposed withdrawal show that an objection was insubstantial? Seemingly not. Objectors often abandon objections when they get a full explanation of the details of the proposed settlement. So for them the use of "and" seems important; they withdraw the objections when they learn more about the deal, and that shows that they were not interposing the objections for an improper purpose. Could an objector who raises substantial objections but also has an improper purpose be sanctioned? The ALI proposal does not condition sanctions on a finding that the objection is meritless. Maybe the judge will act on the objection even though the objector has tried to withdraw it.

It seems worthwhile to mention another question that might arise if sanctions on objectors were considered -- should the court consider sanctions on the parties submitting a flawed proposal to settle? If it is really a "reverse auction" type of situation -- odious to the core -- should the court be reminded that Rule 11 surely does apply to the submissions in support of the proposal? Should it at least be advised to consider replacing class counsel or the class representative or both to give effect to the adequate representation requirements of Rule 23(a)(4)?

It is obvious that much further attention will be needed to sort through the various issues raised by the sanctions possibility. For the present, the main question is whether it is worthwhile to sort through those difficult questions. The sketches above are offered only to provide a concrete focus for that discussion.

(5) Rule 68 Offers and Mootness

The problem of settlement offers made to the proposed class representative that fully satisfy the representative's claim and thereby "pick off" and moot the class action seems to exist principally in the Seventh Circuit. Outside the 7th Circuit there is little enthusiasm for "picking off" the class action with a Rule 68 offer or other sort of settlement offer. Below are three different (perhaps coordinated) ways of dealing with this problem. The first is Ed Cooper's sketch circulated on Dec. 2.

First Sketch: Rule 23 Moot
(Cooper approach)

- 1 (x) (1) When a person sues [or is sued] as a class
 2 representative, the action can be terminated by a tender of 3 relief only if
 4 (A) the court has denied class certification and 5 (B) the court finds that the tender affords complete
 6 relief on the representative's personal claim and 7 dismisses the claim.
 8 (2) A dismissal under Rule 23(x)(1) does not defeat the 9 class representative's standing to appeal the order denying class certification.

Committee Note

1 A defendant may attempt to moot a class action before a
 2 certification ruling is made by offering full relief on the 3 individual claims of the class representative. This ploy should 4 not be allowed to defeat the opportunity for class relief before
 5 the court has had an opportunity to rule on class certification.

7 If a class is certified, it cannot be mooted by an offer
 8 that purports to be for complete class relief. The offer must be 9 treated as an offer to settle, and settlement requires acceptance
 10 by the class representative and approval by the court under Rule 11 23(e).

13 Rule 23(x)(1) gives the court discretion to allow a tender 14 of complete relief on the representative's claim to moot the 15 action after a first ruling that denies class certification. The 16 tender must be made on terms that ensure actual payment. The 17 court may choose instead to hold the way open for certification
 18 of a class different than the one it has refused to certify, or 19 for reconsideration of the certification decision. The court also 20 may treat the tender of complete relief as mooting the 21 representative's claim, but, to protect the possibility that a 22 new representative may come forward, refuse to dismiss the 23 action.
 24

25 If the court chooses to dismiss the action, the would-be 26 class representative retains standing to appeal the denial of 27 certification. [say something to explain this?]
 28

29 [If we revise Rule 23(e) to require court approval of a 30 settlement, voluntary dismissal, or compromise of the representative's personal claim, we could cross-refer to that.]

Rule 68 approach

Rule 68. Offer of Judgment

* * * * *

1 (e) Inapplicable in Class and Derivative Actions. This 2 rule does not apply to class or derivative actions under Rules 23, 23.1, or 23.2.

This addition is drawn from the 1984 amendment proposal for Rule 68. See 102 F.R.D. at 433.

This might solve a substantial portion of the problem, but does not seem to get directly at the problem in the manner that the Cooper approach does. By its terms, Rule 68 does not moot anything. It may be that an offer of judgment strengthens an argument that the case is moot, because what plaintiffs seek are judgments, not promises of payment, the usual stuff of settlement offers. Those judgments do not guarantee actual payment, as the Cooper approach above seems intended to do with its tender provisions. But a Committee Note to such a rule might be a way to support the conclusion that we have accomplished the goal we want to accomplish. Here is what the 1984 Committee Note said:

The last sentence makes it clear that the amended rule does not apply to class or derivative actions. They are excluded for the reason that acceptance of any offer would be subject to court approval, see Rules 23(e) and 23.1, and the offeree's rejection would burden a named representativeofferee with the risk of exposure to potentially heavy liability that could not be recouped from unnamed class members. The latter prospect, moreover, could lead to a conflict of interest between the named representative and other members of the class. See, Gay v. Waiters & Dairy
Lunchmen's Union, Local 30, 86 F.R.D. 500 (N.D. Cal. 1980).

Alternative Approach in Rule 23

Before 2003, there was a considerable body of law that treated a case filed as a class action as subject to Rule 23(e) at least until class certification was denied. A proposed individual settlement therefore had to be submitted to the judge for approval before the case could be dismissed. Judges then would try to determine whether the proposed settlement seemed to involve exploiting the class-action process for the individual enrichment of the named plaintiff who was getting a sweet deal for her "individual" claim. If not, the judge would approve it. If there seemed to have been an abuse of the class-action device, the judge might order notice to the class of the proposed dismissal, so that other class members could come in and take up the litigation cudgel if they chose to do so. Failing that, the court might permit dismissal.

The requirement of Rule 23(e) review for "individual" settlements was retained in the published preliminary draft in 2003. But concerns arose after the public comment period about how the court should approach situations in which the class representative did seem to be attempting to profit personally from filing a class action. How could the court force the plaintiff to proceed if the plaintiff wanted to settle? One answer might be that plaintiff could abandon the suit, but note that "voluntary dismissal" is covered by the rule's approval requirement. Another might be that the court could sponsor or encourage some sort of recruitment effort to find another class representative. In light of these difficulties, the amendments were rewritten to apply only to claims of certified classes.

1     (e) Settlement, Voluntary Dismissal, or Compromise.

3     (1) Before certification. An action filed as a class
4     action may be settled, voluntarily dismissed, or 5     compromised before the court decides whether to grant
6     class-action certification only with the court's
7     approval. The [parties] {proposed class
8     representative} must file a statement identifying any 9     agreement made in connection with the proposed
10    settlement, voluntary dismissal, or compromise.

11
12    (2) Certified class. The claims, issues, or defenses of a 13    certified class may be settled, voluntarily dismissed, 14    or compromised only with the court's approval. The 15    following procedures apply to a proposed settlement,
16    voluntary dismissal, or compromise:

17
18    (A) The court must direct notice in a reasonable 19    manner * * * * *

20
21    (3) Settlement after denial of certification. If the court
22    denies class-action certification, the plaintiff may 23    settle an individual claim without prejudice to seeking 24    appellate review of the court's denial of certification.

The Committee Note could point out that there is no required notice under proposed (e)(1). It could also note that prevailing rule before 2003 that the court should review proposed "individual" settlements. The ALI Principles endorsed such an approach:

This Section favors the approach of requiring limited judicial oversight. The potential risks of precertification settlements or voluntary dismissals that occur without judicial scrutiny warrant a rule requiring that such settlements take effect only with prior judicial approval, after the court has had the opportunity to review the terms of the settlement, including fees paid to counsel. Indeed the very requirement of court approval may deter parties from entering into problematic precertification settlements.

ALI Principles § 3.02 comment (b).

Proposed (e)(3) seeks to do something included also in the Cooper approach above -- ensure that the proposed class representative can appeal denial of certification even after settling the individual claim. Whether something of the sort is needed is uncertain. The issues involved were the subject of considerable litigation in the semi-distant past. See, e.g., United States Parole Comm'n v. Geraghty, 445 U.S. 388 (1980); Deposit Guaranty Nat. Bank v. Roper, 445 U.S. 326 (1980); United Airlines, Inc. v. McDonald, 432 U.S. 385 (1977). It is not presently clear whether this old law is still good law. It might also be debated whether the class representative should be allowed to appeal denial of certification. Alternatively, should class members be given notification that they can appeal? In the distant past, there were suggestions that class members should be notified when the proposed class representative entered into an individual settlement, so that they could seek to pursue the class action.

(6) Issue Classes

A major reason for considering possible rule amendments to deal with issue classes is that there has seemed to be a split in the circuits about whether they can only be allowed if (b)(3) predominance is established. At a point in time, it appeared that the Fifth and Second Circuits were at odds on this subject. But recent reports suggest that all the circuits are coming into relative agreement that in appropriate cases Rule 23(c)(4) can be used even though full Rule 23(b)(3) certification is not possible due to the predominance requirement. If agreement has arrived, it may be that a rule amendment is not in order. But even if agreement has arrived, an amendment might be in order to permit immediate appellate review of the district court's decision of the issue on which the class was certified, before the potentially arduous task of determination of class members' entitlement to relief begins.

Clarifying that predominance is not a prerequisite to 23(c)(4) certification

1           (3) the court finds that the questions of law or fact
2           common to class members predominate over any questions
3           affecting only individual members, subject to Rule
4           23(c)(4), and that a class action is superior to other
5           available methods for fairly and efficiently
6           adjudicating the controversy. The matters pertinent to these findings include: * * * *

The goal of placement here is to say that predominance, but not superiority, is subject to Rule 23(c)(4). A Committee Note could amplify this point. It might also say that a court trying to decide whether issue certification is "appropriate" (as (c)(4) says it should decide) could consider the factors listed in (A) through (D) of (b)(3). It does not seem there would be a need to consider changing (A) through (D) in (b)(3). In 1996, draft amendments to those factors were published for public comment and, after a very large amount of public comment, not pursued further. The relation between (b)(3) and (c)(4) does not seem to warrant considering changes to the factors.

Allowing courts of appeals to review
decision of the common issues
immediately rather than only after final judgment

Because the resolution of the common issue in a class action certified under Rule 23(c)(4) is often a very important landmark in the action, and one that may lead to a great deal more effort to determine individual class members' entitlement to relief, it seems desirable to offer an avenue of immediate review. Requiring that all that additional effort be made before finding out whether the basic ruling will be reversed may in many instances be a strong reason for granting such immediate review. But there may be a significant number of cases in which this concern is not of considerable importance.

§ 2.09(a) of the ALI Principles endorses this objective: "An opportunity for interlocutory appeal should be available with respect to * * * (2) any class-wide determination of a common issue on the merits * * * ." The ALI links this interlocutory review opportunity to review of class certification decisions (covered in ALI § 2.09(a)(1)). It seems that the logical place to insert such a provision is into Rule 23(f), building on the existing mechanism for interlocutory review of class-certification orders:

1           (f) Appeals. A court of appeals may permit an appeal from
 2           an order granting or denying class-action certification
 3           under this rule, or from an order deciding an issue
 4           with respect to which [certification was granted under 5           Rule 23(c)(4)] {a class action was allowed to be 6           maintained under Rule 23(c)(4)} [if the district court
 7           expressly determines that there is no just reason for 8           delay], if a petition for permission to appeal is filed
 9           with the circuit clerk within 14 days after the order is entered. * * *

The Subcommittee has only recently turned its attention to these issues; as a result the above conceptual sketch is particularly preliminary. Several choices are suggested by the use of brackets or braces around language in the draft above.

One is whether to say "certification was granted under Rule 23(c)(4)" or to stick closer to the precise language of (c)(4) -- "was allowed to be maintained under Rule 23(c)(4)." It may be that referring to "class certification" would be preferred because it ties in with the term used in the current provisions of the rule. Rule 23(b) says "may be maintained" but that terminology is not repeated in current 23(f) when addressing the decision that it may be maintained. On the other hand, it is not that decision that would be subject to review under the added provision of the rule. Instead, it is the later resolution of that issue by further proceedings in the district court.

Another choice is suggested by the bracketed language referring to district-court certification that there is no just reason for delay. That is modeled on Rule 54(b). It might be useful to intercept premature or repeated efforts to obtain appellate review with regard to issues as to which (c)(4) certification was granted. For example, could a defendant that moved for summary judgment on the common issue contend that the denial of the summary-judgment motion "decided" the issue?

Perhaps it would be desirable to endow the district court with some latitude in triggering the opportunity to seek appellate review, since a significant reason for allowing it is to avoid wasted time resolving individual claims of class members in the wake of the decision of the individual issue.

On the other hand, if the goal of the amendment is to ensure the losing party of prompt review of the decision of the common issue, it might be worrisome if the district judge's permission were required. It is not required with regard to class-certification decisions, and there may be instances in which parties contend that the district court has delayed resolution of class certification, thereby defeating their right to obtain appellate review of certification.

Lying in the background is the question whether this additional provision in Rule 23(f) would serve an actual need. As noted above, it appears that use of issue classes has become widespread. What is the experience with the "mop up" features of those cases after that common issue is resolved? Does that "mop up" activity often consume such substantial time and energy that an interlocutory appeal should be allowed to protect against waste? Are those issues straightened out relatively easily, leading to entry of a final judgment from which appeal can be taken in the normal course? Is there a risk that even a discretionary opportunity for interlocutory appeal would invite abuse? Are there cases in which the court declines to proceed with resolution of all the individual issues, preferring to allow class members to pursue them in individual litigation? If so, how is a final appealable judgment entered in such cases? If that route is taken, what notice is given to class members of the need to initiate further proceedings?

So there are many questions to be addressed in relation to this possible addition to the rules. Another might be whether it should be considered only if the amendment to Rule 23(b)(3) went forward. If it seems that amendment is not really needed because the courts have reached a consensus on whether issue classes can be certified even when (b)(3) would not permit certification with regard to the entire claim, there could still be a need for a revision to Rule 23(f) along the lines above. Answers to the questions in the previous paragraph about what happens now might inform that background question about the importance of proceeding on the 23(f) possibility.

(7) NoticeChanging the notice requirement in (b)(3) cases

In Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 417 U.S. 156 (1974), the Court observed (id. at 173-71, emphasis in original):

Rule 23(c)(2) provides that, in any class action maintained under subdivision (b)(3), each class member shall be advised that he has the right to exclude himself from the action on request or to enter an appearance through counsel, and further that the judgment, whether favorable or not, will bind all class members who not requesting exclusion. To this end, the court is required to direct to class members "the best notice practicable under the circumstances including individual notice to all members who can be identified through reasonable effort." We think the import of this language is unmistakable. Individual notice must be sent to all class members whose names and addresses may be ascertained through reasonable effort.

The Advisory Committee's Note to Rule 23 reinforces this conclusion. The Advisory Committee described subdivision (e)(2) as "not merely discretionary" and added that the "mandatory notice pursuant to subdivision (c)(2) . . . is designed to fulfill requirements of due process to which the class procedure is of course subject." [The Court discussed Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306 (1950), and Schroeder v. City of New York, 371 U.S. 208 (1962), emphasizing due process roots of this notice requirement and stating that "notice by publication is not enough with respect to a person whose name and address are known or very easily ascertainable."]

Viewed in this context, the express language and intent of Rule 23(c)(2) leave no doubt that individual notice must be provided to those class members who are identifiable through reasonable effort.

Research would likely shed light on the extent to which more recent cases regard means other than U.S. mail as sufficient to give "individual notice." The reality of 21st century life is that other means often suffice. The question is whether or how to alter Rule 23(c)(2) to make it operate more sensibly. Here are alternatives:

(2) Notice

5           (B) For (b)(3) Classes. For any class certified under Rule 6           23(b)(3), the court must direct to class members the 7           best notice that is practicable under the 8           circumstances, including individual notice by 9           electronic or other means to all members who can be identified through reasonable effort. * * * * *

It is an understatement to say that much has changed since Eisen was decided. Perhaps it is even correct to say that a communications revolution has occurred. Certainly most Americans are accustomed today to communicating in ways that were not possible (or even imagined) in 1974. Requiring mailed notice of class certification seems an anachronism, and some reports indicate that judges are not really insisting on it.

Indeed, the current ease of communicating with class members has already arisen with regard to the cy pres discussion, topic (3) above. There, the possibility of excusing payouts to class members for amounts smaller than $100 is raised as a possibility, but it is also suggested that much smaller payouts can now be made efficiently using refined electronic means. More generally, it appears that enterprises that specialize in class action administration have gained much expertise in communicating with class members. Particularly in an era of "big data," lists of potential class members may be relatively easy to generate and use for inexpensive electronic communications.

For the present, the main question is whether there is reason not to focus on some relaxation of the current rule that would support a Committee Note saying that first class mail is no longer required by the rule. Such a Note could presumably offer some observations about the variety of alternative methods of communicating with class members, and the likelihood that those methods will continue to evolve. The likely suggestion will be that courts should not (as Eisen seemed to do) embrace one method as required over the long term.

Notice in Rule 23(b)(1) or (b)(2) actions

Another question that could be raised is whether these developments in electronic communications also support reconsideration of something that was considered but not done in 2001-02.

The package of proposed amendments published for comment in 2001 included a provision for reasonable notice (not individual notice, and surely not mandatory mailed notice) in (b)(1) and (b)(2) class actions. Presently, the rule contains no requirement of any notice at all in those cases, although Rule 23(c)(2)(A) notes that the court "may direct appropriate notice to the class." In addition, Rule 23(d)(1)(B) invites the court to give "appropriate notice to some or all class members" whenever that seems wise. And if a settlement is proposed, the notice requirement of Rule 23(e)(1) applies and "notice in a reasonable manner" is required. But if a (b)(1) or (b)(2) case is fully litigated rather than settled, the rule does not require any notice at any time.

It is thus theoretically possible that class members in a (b)(1) or (b)(2) class action might find out only after the fact that their claims are foreclosed by a judgment in a class action that they knew nothing about.

In 2001-02, there was much forceful opposition to the proposed additional rule requirement of some reasonable effort at notice of class certification on the ground that it was already difficult enough to persuade lawyers to take such cases, and that this added cost would make an already difficult job of getting lawyers to take cases even more difficult, and perhaps impossible. The idea was shelved.

Is it time to take the idea off the shelf again? One question is whether the hypothetical problem of lack of notice is not real. It is said that (b)(2) classes exhibit more "cohesiveness," so that they may learn of a class action by informal means, making a rule change unnecessary. It may also be that there is almost always a settlement in such cases, so that the Rule 23(e) notice requirement does the needed job. (Of course, that may occur at a point when notice is less valuable than it would have been earlier in the case.) And it may be that the cost problems that were raised 15 years ago have not abated, or have not abated enough, for the vulnerable populations that are sometimes the classes in (b)(2) actions.

The Subcommittee has not devoted substantial attention to these issues. For present purposes, this invitation is only to discuss the possibility of returning to the issues not pursued in 2002. If one wanted to think about how a rule change might be made, one could consider replacing the word "may" in Rule 23(c)(2)(A) with "must." A Committee Note might explore the delicate issues that courts should have in mind in order to avoid unduly burdening the public interest lawyers often called upon to bring these cases, and the public interest organizations that often provide support to counsel, particularly when the actions may not provide substantial attorney fee or cost awards.

Settlement Review Factors: 2000 Draft Note

As an alternative approach to factors, particularly not on the list of four the conceptual draft rule endorses as mandatory findings for settlement approval, the following is an interim draft of possible Committee Note language considered during the drafting of current Rule 23(e).

Reviewing a proposed class-action settlement often will not be easy. Many settlements can be evaluated only after considering a host of factors that reflect the substance of the terms agreed upon, the knowledge base available to the parties and to the court to appraise the strength of the class's position, and the structure and nature of the negotiation process. A helpful review of many factors that may deserve consideration is provided by In re: Prudential Ins. Co. America Sales Practice Litigation Agent Actions, 148 F.3d 283, 316-324 (3d Cir.1998). Any list of these factors must be incomplete. The examples provided here are only examples of factors that may be important in some cases but irrelevant in others. Matters excluded from the examples may, in a particular case, be more important than any matter offered as an example. The examples are meant to inspire reflection, no more.

Many of the factors reflect practices that are not fully described in Rule 23 itself, but that often affect the fairness of a settlement and the court's ability to detect substantive or procedural problems that may make approval inappropriate. Application of these factors will be influenced by variables that are not listed. One dimension involves the nature of the substantive class claims, issues, or defenses. Another involves the nature of the class, whether mandatory or opt-out. Another involves the mix of individual claims – a class involving only small claims may be the only opportunity for relief, and also pose less risk that the settlement terms will cause sacrifice of recoveries that are important to individual class members; a class involving a mix of large and small individual claims may involve conflicting interests; a class involving many claims that are individually important, as for example a mass-torts personal-injury class, may require special care. Still other dimensions of difference will emerge. Here, as elsewhere, it is important to remember that class actions span a wide range of heterogeneous characteristics that are important in appraising the fairness of a proposed settlement as well as for other purposes.

Recognizing that this list of examples is incomplete, and includes some factors that have not been much developed in reported decisions, among the factors that bear on review of a settlement are these:

- (A) a comparison of the proposed settlement with the probable outcome of a trial on the merits of liability and damages as to the claims, issues, or defenses of the class and individual class members;
- (B) the probable time, duration, and cost of trial;
- (C) the probability that the [class] claims, issues, or defenses could be maintained through trial on a class basis;
- (D) the maturity of the underlying substantive issues, as measured by the information and experience gained through adjudicating individual actions, the development of scientific knowledge, and other facts that bear on the ability to assess the probable outcome of a trial and appeal on the merits of liability and individual damages as to the claims, issues, or defenses of the class and individual class members;
- (E) the extent of participation in the settlement negotiations by class members or class representatives, a judge, a magistrate judge, or a special master;
- (F) the number and force of objections by class members;
- (G) the probable resources and ability of the parties to pay, collect, or enforce the settlement compared with enforcement of the probable judgment predicted under Rule 23(e)(5)(A);
- (H) the existence and probable outcome of claims by other classes and subclasses;
- (I) the comparison between the results achieved for individual class or subclass members by the settlement or compromise and the results achieved – or likely to be achieved – for other claimants;
- (J) whether class or subclass members are accorded the right to opt out of the settlement;
- (K) the reasonableness of any provisions for attorney fees, including agreements with respect to the division of fees among attorneys and the terms of any agreements affecting the fees to be charged for representing individual claimants or objectors;
- (L) whether the procedure for processing individual claims under the settlement is fair and reasonable;

- (M) whether another court has rejected a substantially similar settlement for a similar class; and
- (N) the apparent intrinsic fairness of the settlement terms.

Apart from these factors, settlement review also may provide an occasion to review the cogency of the initial class definition. The terms of the settlement themselves, or objections, may reveal an effort to homogenize conflicting interests of class members and with that demonstrate the need to redefine the class or to designate subclasses. Redefinition of the class or the recognition of subclasses is likely to require renewed settlement negotiations, but that prospect should not deter recognition of the need for adequate representation of conflicting interests. This lesson is entrenched by the decisions in Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815 (1999), and Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591 (1997).

Appendix II

Prevailing Class Action Settlement Approval Factors
Circuit-By-Circuit*First Circuit

No "single test." See: In re Compact Disc Minimum Advertised Price Antitrust Litigation, 216 F.R.D. 197-206-207 (D. Me. 2003) (Hornby, J.):

"There is no single test in the First Circuit for determining the fairness, reasonableness and adequacy of a proposed class action settlement. In making this assessment, other circuits generally consider the negotiating process by which the settlement was reached and the substantive fairness of the terms of the settlement compared to the result likely to be reached at trial. See, e.g., Weinberger v. Kendrick, 698 F.2d 61, 73-74 (2d Cir. 1982). Specifically, the appellate courts consider some or all of the following factors: (1) comparison of the proposed settlement with the likely result of litigation; (2) reaction of the class to the settlement; (3) stage of the litigation and the amount of discovery completed; (4) quality of counsel; (5) conduct of the negotiations; and (6) prospects of the case, including risk, complexity, expense and duration. [citing cases.] Finally, the case law tells me that a settlement following sufficient discovery and genuine arm's-length negotiation is presumed fair." [citing cases.]

Second Circuit

"Grinnell Factors"

City of Detroit v. Grinnell, 495 F.2d 448, 463 (2d Cir. 1974):

". . . (1) the complexity, expense and likely duration of the litigation . . .; (2) the reaction of the class to the settlement . . .; (3) the stage of the proceedings and the amount of discovery completed . . .; (4) the risks of establishing liability . . .; (5) the risks of establishing damages . . .; (6) the risks of maintaining the class action through the trial . . .; (7) the ability of the defendants to withstand a greater judgment; (8) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund in light of the best possible recovery . . .; (9) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund to a possible recovery in light of all the attendant risks of litigation. . . ."

Third Circuit

"Girsh Factors" (adopts Grinnell factors)

Girsh v. Jepson, 521 F.2d 153, 157 (3rd Cir. 1975)

Fourth Circuit

"Jiffy Lube Factors"

In re Jiffy Lube Securities Litigation, 927 F.2d 155, 158-159 (4th Cir. 1991):

"In examining the proposed . . . settlement for fairness and adequacy under Rule 23(e), the district court properly followed the fairness factors listed in Maryland federal district cases which have interpreted the Rule 23(e) standard for settlement approval. See In re Montgomery County Real Estate Antitrust Litigation, 83 F.R.D. 305 (D. Md. 1979).) The court determined that the settlement was reached as a result of good-faith bargaining at arm's length, without collusion, on the basis of (1) the posture of the case at the time settlement was proposed, (2) the extent of discovery that had been conducted, (3) the circumstances surrounding the negotiations, and (4) the experience of counsel in the area of securities class action litigation. . . .

The district court's assessment of the adequacy of the settlement was likewise based on factors enumerated in Montgomery: (1) the relative strength of the plaintiffs' case on the merits, (2) the existence of any difficulties of proof or strong defenses the plaintiffs are likely to encounter if the case goes to trial, (3) the anticipated duration and expense of additional litigation, (4) the solvency of the defendants and the likelihood of recovery on a litigated judgment, and (5) the degree of opposition to the settlement."

Fifth Circuit

"Reed Factors"

Reed v. General Motors Corp., 703 F.2d 170, 172 (5th Cir. 1983):

"(There are six focal facets: (1) the existence of fraud or collusion behind the settlement; (2) the complexity, expense, and likely duration of the litigation; (3) the stage of the proceedings and the amount of discovery completed; (4) the probability of plaintiffs' success on the merits; (5) the range of possible recovery; and (6) the opinions of the class counsel, class representatives, and absent members."

Sixth Circuit

"UAW Factors"

Int'l Union, United Auto. Workers, etc. v. General Motors Corp., 497 F.3d 615 (Sixth Cir. 2007):

"Several factors guide the inquiry: (1) the risk of fraud or collusion; (2) the complexity, expense and likely duration of the litigation; (3) the amount of discovery engaged in by the parties; (4) the likelihood of success on the merits; (5) the opinions of class counsel and class representatives; (6) the reaction of absent class members; and (7) the public interest. See Granada Invs., Inc. v. DWG Corp., 962 F.2d 1203, 1205 (6th Cir. 1992); Williams v. Vukovich, 720 F.2d 909, 922-23 (6th Cir. 1983).

Seventh Circuit

"Armstrong Factors"

Armstrong v. Jackson, 616 F.2d 305, 315 (7th Cir. 1980):

"Although review of class action settlements necessarily proceeds on a case-by-case basis, certain factors have been consistently identified as relevant to the fairness determination. The district court's opinion approving the settlement now before us listed these factors:

Among the factors which the Court should consider in judging the fairness of the proposal are the following:

"(1) " * * * the strength of the case for plaintiffs on the merits, balanced against the amount offered in settlement';

"(2) "(T)he defendant's ability to pay';

"(3) "(T)he complexity, length and expense of further litigation';

"(4) "(T)he amount of opposition to the settlement';"

Professor Moore notes in addition the factors of:

"(1) * * *

"(2) Presence of collusion in reaching a settlement;

"(3) The reaction of members of the (class to the settlement;

"(4) The opinion of competent counsel;

"(5) The stage of the proceedings and the amount of discovery completed."

3B Moore's Federal Practice P 23.80(4) at 23-521 (2d ed. 1978)"

Eighth Circuit

"Grunin Factors"

Grunin v. International House of Pancakes, 513 F.2d 114, 124 (8th Cir. 1975):

"The district court must consider a number of factors in determining whether a settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate: the merits of the plaintiff's case, weighed against the terms of the settlement; the defendant's financial condition; the complexity and expense of further litigation; and the amount of opposition to the settlement. Grunin, 513 F.2d at 124. . . .; Van Horn v. Trickey, 840 F.2d 604, 607 (8th Cir. 1988)."

Ninth Circuit

"Hanlon Factors"

Hanlon v. Chrysler Corp., 150 F.3d 1011, 1026 (9th Cir. 1998):

"Assessing a settlement proposal requires the district court to balance a number of factors: the strength of the plaintiffs' case; the risk, expense, complexity, and likely duration of further litigation; the risk of maintaining class action status throughout the trial; the amount offered in settlement; the extent of discovery completed and the stage of the proceedings; the experience and views of counsel; the presence of a governmental participant; and the reaction of the class members to the proposed settlement."

Tenth Circuit

"Jones Factors"

Jones v. Nuclear Pharmacy, 741 F.2d 322 (10th Cir. 1984):

"In exercising its discretion, the trial court must approve a settlement if it is fair, reasonable and adequate. In assessing whether the settlement is fair, reasonable and adequate the trial court should consider:

(1) whether the proposed settlement was fairly and honestly negotiated;

(2) whether serious questions of law and fact exist, placing the ultimate outcome of the litigation in doubt;

(3) whether the value of an immediate recovery outweighs the mere possibility of future relief after protracted and expensive litigation; and

(4) the judgment of the parties that the settlement is fair and reasonable."

Eleventh Circuit

"Bennett Factors"

Bennett v. Behring Corp., 737 F.2d 982, 986 (11th Cir. 1984) (quoting Cotton v. Hinton, 559 F.2d at 1330-31 (5th Cir. 1977):

"Our review of the district court's order reveals that in approving the subject settlement, the court carefully identified the guidelines established by this court governing approval of class action settlements. Specifically, the court made findings of fact that there was no fraud or collusion in arriving at the settlement and that the settlement was fair, adequate and reasonable, considering (1) the likelihood of success at trial; (2) the range of possible recovery; (3) the point on or below the range of possible recovery at which a settlement is fair, adequate and reasonable; (4) the complexity, expense and duration of litigation; (5) the substance and amount of opposition to the settlement; and (6) the stage of proceedings at which the settlement was achieved."

D.C. Circuit

No "single test." Courts consider factors from other jurisdictions.

See In re LivingSocial Marketing and Sales Practice Litigation, 298 F.R.D. 1, 11 (D.R.C. 2013):

"There is "no single test" for settlement approval in this jurisdiction; rather, courts have considered a variety of factors, including: "(a) whether the settlement is the result of arms-length negotiations; (b) the terms of the settlement in relation to the strengths of plaintiffs' case; (c) the status of the litigation proceedings at the time of settlement; (d) the reaction of the class; and (e) the opinion of experienced counsel." In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig., 205 F. R. D. 369, 375 (D.D.C. 2002) ("Lorazect") (collecting cases)."

Federal Circuit

Dauphin Island Property Owners Assoc. v. United States, 90 Fed. Cl. 95 (2009):

"The case law and rules of this court do not provide definitive factors for evaluating the fairness of a proposed settlement. Many courts have, however, considered the following factors in determining the fairness of a class settlement:

(1) The relative strengths of plaintiffs' case in comparison to the proposed settlement, which necessarily takes into account:

(a) The complexity, expense and likely duration of the litigation; (b) the risks of establishing liability; (c) the risks of establishing damages; (d) the risks of maintaining the class action through trial; (e) the reasonableness of the settlement fund in light of the best possible recovery; (f) the reasonableness of the settlement fund to a possible recovery in light of all the attendant risks of litigation; (g) the stage of the proceedings and the amount of discovery completed; (h) the risks of maintaining the class action through trial;

(2) The recommendation of the counsel for the class regarding the proposed settlement, taking into account the adequacy of class counsels' representation of the class;

(3) The reaction of the class members to the proposed settlement, taking into account the adequacy of notice to the class members of the settlement terms;

(4) The fairness of the settlement to the entire class;

(5) The fairness of the provision for attorney fees;

(6) The ability of the defendants to withstand a greater judgment, taking into account whether the defendant is a governmental actor or a private entity.

Most importantly, this court must compare the terms of the settlement agreement with the potential rewards of litigation and consider the negotiation process through which agreement was reached."

California

Kullar v. Foot Locker Retail Inc., 168 Cal. App. 4th 116, 128

(Cal. App. 2008) (quoting Dunk v. Ford Motor Co., 48 Cal. App. 4th 1794, 1801 (Cal. App. 1996)):

"The well-recognized factors that the trial court should consider in evaluating the reasonableness of a class action settlement agreement include "the strength of plaintiffs' case, the risk, expense, complexity and likely duration of further litigation, the risk of maintaining class action status through trial, the amount offered in settlement, the extent of discovery completed and the stage of the proceedings, the experience and views of counsel, the presence of a governmental participant, and the reaction of the class members to the proposed settlement."

Principles of Aggregate Litigation (ALI 2010)

§ 3.05 Judicial Review of the Fairness of a Class Settlement

(a) Before approving or rejecting any classwide settlement, a court must conduct a fairness hearing. A court reviewing the fairness of a proposed class-action settlement must address, in on-the-record findings and conclusions, whether:

(1) the class representatives and class counsel have been and currently are adequately representing the class;

(2) the relief afforded to the class (taking into account any ancillary agreement that may be part of the settlement) is fair and reasonable given the costs, risks, probability of success, and delays of trial and appeal;

(3) class members are treated equitably (relative to each other) based on their facts and circumstances and are not disadvantaged by the settlement considered as a whole; and

(4) the settlement was negotiated at arm's length and was not the product of collusion.

(b) The court may approve a settlement only if it finds, based on the criteria in subsection (a), that the settlement would be fair to the class and to every substantial segment of the class. A negative finding on any of the criteria specified in subsections (a)(1)-(a)(4) renders the settlement unfair. A settlement may also be found to be unfair for any other significant reason that may arise from the facts and circumstances of the particular case.

(c) The burden is on the proponents of a settlement to establish that the settlement is fair and reasonable to the absent class members who are to be bound by that settlement. In reviewing a proposed settlement, a court should not apply any presumption that the settlement is fair and reasonable.

(d) A court may approve or disapprove a class settlement but may not of its own accord amend the settlement to add, delete, or modify any term. The court may, however, inform the parties that it will not approve a settlement unless the parties amend the agreement in a manner specified by the court. This subsection does not limit the court's authority to set fair and reasonable attorneys' fees.

(e) If, before or as a result of a fairness hearing, the parties agree to modify the terms of a settlement in any material way, new notice must be provided to any class members who may be substantially adversely affected by the change. In particular:

(1) For opt-out classes, a new opportunity for class members to opt out must be granted to all class members substantially adversely affected by the changes to the settlement.

(2) When a settlement is modified to increase significantly the benefits to the class, class members who opted out before such modifications must be given notice and a reasonable opportunity to opt back into the class.

(f) For class members who did not opt out of the class, new notice and opt-out rights are not required when, as a result of a fairness hearing, a settlement is revised and the new terms would entitle such class members to benefits not substantially less than those proposed in the original settlement.
